City just isn't making grade

ENVIRONMENT

Youth council evaluated T.O on its climate change efforts

May Warren
Metro | Toronto

You need to do better, Toronto.

That's the back-to-school message a group of high school students is sending to the city about climate change.

The Toronto Youth Environmental Council developed a report card to score The Six on the issue and — in its initial round of grading — has doled a mediocre C.

Lily Barraclough, the council's former executive director turned adviser, said the report card is meant to "hold the city accountable for the current action or lack of action."

"We're the future of our planet, and we're the ones who are going to be dealing with the worst effects of climate change," the 18-year-old said.

Along with the overall grade, the report gives individual marks in a variety of categories.

Toronto scored pretty well in some areas, such as waste, which took into account increased activity when it comes to things like recycling and composting.

The mark for "renewable energy" pulled the overall score down the most since the city gets less of its energy from sources like wind and sun than other parts of the country.

The group will present the report card to a city council committee on Friday and is challenging politicians to commit to a goal of zero net carbon emissions by 2040. The report card was developed with support from iMatter, a non-profit that has helped youth in U.S. cities such as Des Moines, Iowa, and Ventura, Calif., with similar efforts.

It's the first one done for a Canadian city.

Larry Kraft, executive director and chief mentor at iMatter, said the goal is to empower young people to speak up on climate change.

Looking at the issue at the local level helps avoid roadblocks that can come from dealing with higher levels of government.

"It's where young people live, it's where they can actually take specific action," said Kraft.

Alice Cheng, the youth environment council's president, wants to see young people's voices be a larger part of the conversation about issues that will affect them more down the road.

"If we just leave the decision making to solely adults, I don't think they'll necessarily have our future interests in mind at the top of their agendas," the 15-year-old said.

REAL ESTATE

Buyers willing to go over budget: Poll

How much financial comfort are home buyers willing to risk to win a bidding war?

In the Toronto region's take-no-prisoners real estate market, more than half of consumers said they would consider going up to 10 per cent over their budget — as much as hundreds of thousands of dollars more — to emerge victorious.

A poll for the Real Estate Council of Ontario (RECO)found that 57 per cent of Toronto-area buyers would exceed their set maximum, compared to only 41 per cent provincewide.

Thirty-eight per cent of respondents said they would consider going up to 20 per cent over budget to get a house.

That is particularly concerning, given that the average price of a single-family, detached home in Toronto is $1.2 million, said Kelvin Culcey, RECO deputy registrar.

As part of its consumer protection mandate, the agency in charge of regulating realtors is launching an awareness campaign called, Be Home Smart.

It is setting up booths at 13 Ontario events, including Canada's Bridal Show in Toronto this weekend, where consumers can take a quiz to evaluate their real estate savvy.

The poll found first-time millennial buyers, the cohort aged 34-and-under, are most vulnerable to buyer's remorse. If they're buying a new condo, there is a 10-day cooling off period in which a consumer can withdraw from the purchase, said Culcey.

Haikusters have slammed

HAVE YOUR SAY

Our readers blew us away with Toronto-themed poems

Genna Buck
Metro | Toronto

If we could sum up our experience writing and judging haikus over the past few days, it would go something like this:

Haiku poetry:
Everyone thinks the thing's easy,
'til they try the thing.

After our story last week about the Haiku Deathmatch, we challenged Metro readers to compose their own haikus in honour of Toronto.

From hilarious odes to the Leafs to heartfelt praises of the Big Smoke's diversity and natural beauty, you outdid yourselves.

Rule-breaking is what art is all about. So we did not disqualify people who submitted poems that did not follow either the three-line 5-7-5 syllable structure, or the requirement of a Toronto theme. Read these tradition-busting poems in our honourable mentions section!

We want you to keep your amazing literary talents sharp. So here's our next challenge: Tell us a Toronto story in six words or less.

There's a long tradition of ultra-short tales, from Hemingway's "For sale: Baby shoes, never worn" to Margaret Atwood's classic doomed loved story: "Longed for him. Got him. Sh-t."

We'll go first: Real panda, trash panda: Zoo friends!

Your turn: Send your stories to angela.mullins@metronews.ca or tweet them to @MetroNewsCanada.

HAIKU CHALLENGE WINNER

A flock of birds fly
to the sound of the trolley.
A live performance.

The wordplay in When a Streetcar Comes Along by Gu Zhenzhen, who submitted a record 10 haikus, impressed our editors. Here's our next reader challenge: Tell us a short story about Toronto in six words or less. Send your masterpieces to angela.mullins@metronews.ca or tweet @MetroNewsCanada.

HAIKU CHALLENGE RUNNER-UP

We wait patiently
For Leafs to win the cup they play
Like camel droppings

You had the newsroom cackling with this one, Jeff Pancer. This haiku has the classic element of a turn — a surprising or funny revelation. We're dying to know, though: Why camel, specifically?

HAIKU CHALLENGE THIRD PLACE

Busy life with twins
Enjoy my break on the train.
Metro makes my day.

We may be a little biased, but this poem made us smile. You made our day too, Vanessa Ong.

Dolly Parton's coming to town

ENTERTAINMENT

Singer, 70, has lasting power, inspires local after-party

Genna Buck
Metro | Toronto

She may have had her first hit in 1966, but Dolly Parton definitely isn't your grandma's country star.

She's not even your mom's.

The sassy 70-year-old singer-songwriter, who is playing the Molson Amphitheatre on Friday, has always been a gay icon. But her feminist credentials — and longstanding support of working women slogging "9 to 5" — have earned her platinum status among millennials.

Dolly Parton, improbably, is cool.

"I live my Dolly love out loud. She's my role model as an entertainer, a musician, a businesswoman, a feminist and a human being," Toronto writer Sarah Boesveld, 29, gushed in Chatelaine magazine earlier this year.

Steve Cann, one of the owners of Lipstick and Dynamite, located on Queen Street West. The bar is hosting the event on Friday in collaboration with Steers & Queers. EDUARDO LIMA/METRO

To that point, Lipstick & Dynamite, a hip dive bar on Queen St. W., is throwing a Dolly-themed after-party Friday, in collaboration with Steers & Queers, a long-running, country-tinged dance party.

"THE QUEEN IS COMING TO TOWN," the Facebook event page exclaims.

"We're stoked. She's a living legend," said Steve Cann, Lipstick & Dynamite's co-owner. "Our capacity is not huge, and we're going to be packed, I imagine."

The country icon on stage during her Pure and Simple Tour.
CHRISTOPHER DOLAN/ THE CITIZENS' VOICE VIA THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Toronto fans can barely contain their excitement. Social media is abuzz with Dolly fever.

"I like her because of her unapologetic hyper femininity," said Molly Willats, a 27-year-old University of Toronto grad student. "I think being hyper femme is often viewed quite derisively."

Brad Horvath, a Toronto producer who worked on The Book Lady, a 2008 documentary about Parton's philanthropy, isn't surprised by all the Dolly-mania.

"I think young people are into Dolly because they grew up with her — their parents were fans or they watched her on Hannah Montana," he said.

It's "the paradox of her persona," that everyone loves, Horvath added.

"She's artificial and authentic, ambitious and altruistic, distant and down-to-earth. And everyone knows that when she's gone, there will never be another Dolly Parton."

"My Schulich MBA has given me the opportunity to grow as a leader and challenged me to learn how to successfully navigate through complexity."

TUFF gets going for tenth birthday

Movies on the move are back on subway... for 60 seconds

Richard Crouse
For Metro Canada

Showing silent movies in subway stations, the Toronto Urban Film Festival draws a million daily viewers. CONTRIBUTED

When most of us go to the movies, we head to the theatre. But for nine days every year Torontonians can watch films on the way to the theatre … as long as they take the subway.

The tenth annual Toronto Urban Film Festival takes over all 346 PATTISON Onestop digital TTC subway screens from Saturday to Sept. 18 for a curated film fest consisting of 87 one-minute silent movies from all over the world.

"This city loves film and this is a festival that brings film right to the people while they are on their way to work," says festival organizer Sharon Switzer. "They don't have to go looking for it."

Switzer came up with the idea for TUFF in 2006.

"It was the Onestop screens," she says on her inspiration for the fest. "They were very new at the time. People weren't used to those screens. They were uncomfortable with them. It seemed like a really good way to give a voice to Torontonians and artists in this public space."

TUFF has grown to become North America's largest and longest-running commuter film festival, with an audience of more than one million daily commuters. Switzer admits, however, the initial reaction wasn't encouraging.

"From artists it was less than warm," she says. "Unlike Americans, who I think would jump at the chance to be in a place that showed to a million people, artists in Toronto were suspect because it was a commercial application."

Plus, the one-minute format was unheard of at the time. Now, it is everywhere.

"I went to all my friends and colleagues who taught film in universities and got them to get their students interested. I had to get a generation going."

This year offerings include films from Iran, Trinidad and Tobago, "a very fun film from Slovenia" and ten Canadian shorts from past winners.

"At the beginning of the festival they're not ready for it," Switzer says of the million or so commuters who will see the films. "But by a few days in they know to look and they do. It brings a community of people who notice something different is going on."

DRIVER SHORTAGE

School bus chaos in first week

Deckard Peters, 7, couldn't wait to get on the big yellow school bus and begin his first day in a Grade 2 autism class at General Mercer Junior Public School on Tuesday. But wait he did; after an hour, he was beside himself and in tears, refusing to let his parents take him in the car.

Disruptions have affected at least 2,000 students from Toronto public and Catholic school boards, who've been left stranded or waiting hours for buses because of what officials are calling a sudden shortage of drivers.

"It's all hands on deck now, we're doing everything we can to ensure students entitled to bus service get it," John Yan, spokesperson for the Toronto Catholic District School Board, said Thursday.

However, Yan said it could take two weeks before enough drivers hired and trained to do the job.

About 60 of the 1,758 bus routes for students at the Catholic board and the Toronto District School Board are without drivers, Yan said.

The result was chaos for many students and working parents, who took to social media and airwaves with tales of kids waiting up to 90 minutes for buses in blazing heat, and confusion at after-school dropoffs with no buses in sight. Some students were being sent home in taxis or, driven by school staff who wanted to ensure their safety.

While schools were reporting incremental improvements by Thursday, the bus consortium was still reporting delays of up to 105 minutes on some after-school routes. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Minister of National Defence Harjit Sajjan speaks during the UN Peacekeeping Defence Ministerial meeting at Lancaster House, in London, on Thursday STEFAN ROUSSEAU/HE CANADIAN PRESS

Liberals stump for peacekeeping plan

MILITARY

Opposition says UN has shown itself unable to run missions

Battle lines are being drawn between Liberals and Conservatives as the government prepares to deploy hundreds of Canadian troops to an as-yet-unannounced United Nations peacekeeping mission in Africa.

The pending clash, which is breaking along ideological lines, was previewed Thursday and is expected to figure prominently when the House of Commons returns from its summer break later this month.

At a peacekeeping summit in London, Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan affirmed the government's plan to make up to 600 soldiers and 150 police officers available for peace operations. The government will also spend $450 million on peace support projects, and will host a similar peacekeeping summit next year.

"Supporting and encouraging peace is certainly part of what it means to be Canada," Sajjan told counterparts from around the world.

But even as Sajjan was touting the return of Canadian blue berets, Conservative defence critics James Bezan and Pierre Paul-Hus were in Ottawa taking shots at the UN's record on peacekeeping, and the Liberal government's motives for pursuing such a mission.

Raising the spectre of peacekeeping failures including Rwanda and Bosnia, which many Canadians still remember, the Tories said the UN hasn't proven itself capable of managing peacekeeping missions.

Instead, Bezan held up Canada's participation in the U.S.-led war against Daesh as an example of a proper military mission.

> We shouldn't be using our troops as pawns.
> James Bezan

"In the last 15 years," he said, "our success in these types of missions has been in peacemaking, not in peacekeeping."

The Conservatives also accused the Liberals of being more interested in winning a UN Security Council seat than actually participating in a mission that is in Canada's national interest.

"The ultimate goal here is to achieve a seat at the UN Security Council when it becomes available," Bezan told reporters. "That to me is politics, and we shouldn't be using our troops as pawns."

To that end, the Conservatives called on the government to have a debate and vote in the Commons once it decides where Canadian troops will be deployed. Parliament is set to resume on Sept. 19.

The Liberals have yet to say what peacekeeping missions they are considering, aside from a broad statement about heading to Africa.

Mali, which has the dubious distinction of being the most dangerous peacekeeping mission, is considered the frontrunner, though the Central African Republic, South Sudan and the Democratic Republic of Congo are also believed to be on the table.

"The Liberals must clearly lay out the details before deploying Canadian Armed Forces personnel to a war zone," Bezan said. "As the Official Opposition, we are calling on the government to bring the UN mission that they choose to Parliament for a full debate and a vote."

Clement rejects values testing

Tony Clement THE CANADIAN PRESS

Conservative leadership candidate Tony Clement says he will propose enhanced security screening for immigrants — but not a values test — as part of a broader plan for countering the threat of terrorism.

"If we can give our security personnel the right tools to identify potential threats to our country, then I believe that is exactly what we should be doing and quite frankly, that is where the threat is," Clement said Thursday as he shared part of the national security platform he plans to unveil in greater detail next week.

The Ontario MP and former cabinet minister initially declined to get into the debate over a proposal from leadership rival Kellie Leitch to vet immigrants and refugees for their views on what she calls anti-Canadian values.

But with discussion over the Leitch proposal still dominating the otherwise sleepy leadership campaign and other candidates speaking up, Clement said Thursday he decided to comment to keep the issue from overshadowing his policy announcement next week.

Clement said Leitch's "trial balloon"is not the right approach.

"I think spending our resources to have government personnel deciding who or who is not going to be a good Canadian is neither practical nor desirable, but I do believe that we should enhance our ability to screen out individuals who pose a threat to our society," Clement said. "That's where our focus should be, not on the many immigrants who actually add to our society."

Clement said that should he be selected as leader next May, the party will be "pro-Canadian values," but that is not all.

"It will also be pro-immigration, it will be pro-national security and it will be pro-jobs and that's the kind of party that can win the next election," he said.

Clement said he did not want to go into any detail about his security proposal before his formal news conference Monday, but did refer to a June 2015 report from the Senate national security committee.

A 30-year-old Toronto man has become the latest Canadian to successfully complete a solo swim across the English Channel. Samuel Bail finished the roughly 32-kilometre swim on Tuesday, taking 15 hours and 25 minutes to swim the distance between England and France.

According to the Serpentine Swimming Club, Bail becomes the 28th Canadian to complete the open-water swim since 1951.

Grits seek input on terror law

The Liberal government's promised changes to a controversial anti-terrorism law likely won't come until next year, once officials have digested an array of public suggestions on revamping national security measures.

The government opened an online consultation Thursday, soliciting feedback on everything from sharing information and preventing attacks to conducting surveillance and ensuring intelligence agencies are accountable.

Texas teen dead after shooting student

A 14-year-old girl died of an apparent self-inflicted gunshot wound Thursday after shooting and injuring another female student inside a high school in West Texas, according to the local sheriff.

Authorities did not release a possible motive for the gunfire that erupted shortly before 9 a.m. at Alpine High School in Alpine, a town of 5,900 about 220 miles southeast of El Paso. The shooting was followed by a series of unrelated threats made by a male caller that added to the chaos of the morning and diverted law enforcement from the high school.

"That's ridiculous for someone to call in something like this when we've got this situation going on," Brewster County Sheriff Ronny Dodson told radio station KVLF.

The sheriff said the family of the girl who died had moved to the Alpine area about six months ago. She was a freshman at the school.

Dodson said the injured student ran outside seeking help and was taken to a hospital with injuries that weren't considered life-threatening.

In interview, nominee recalls some formative experience

Rebecca Williams
Metro | Toronto

Hillary Clinton spoke openly in a new interview published by Humans of New York Thursday.

The Democratic presidential nominee retold a story about taking a law admissions test at Harvard and having to endure heckling by her male counterparts.

"My friend and I were some of the only women in the room, I was feeling nervous," she says. "And while we're waiting for the exam to start, a group of men began to yell at us ... it turned into a real 'pile on.' One of them even said: 'If you take my spot, I'll get drafted, and I'll go to Vietnam, and I'll die.'"

Clinton went on to perhaps challenge some of her critics head-on concerning her "aloofness."

"But I had to learn as a young woman to control my emotions ... And sometimes I think I come across more in the 'walled-off' arena. And if I create that perception, then I take responsibility."

The nominee's open comments about the balance between needing to "protect yourself" while not wanting to "seem 'walled off'" struck a chord with some women online.

"Women all over the world know this as fact, all too much. Be quiet, but not too quiet. Be smart, but not too smart ... it goes on and on," wrote a woman by the name of Michelle Jenkins in one of the top comments on the Humans of New York's Facebook post of the interview.

Canadians to pay more for iPhone 7

TECHNOLOGY

Price is about 8 per cent higher than south of border

Even after allowing for currency exchange, Canadians will pay more than their American neighbours for the latest iteration of the iPhone.

The differential on top of an adjustment for the strong U.S. dollar adds about eight per cent to the list price of the just-announced iPhone 7 series — without a contract and depending on the handset's size and storage capacity, said Sentry Investments vice-president Andy Nasr.

That calculation is for an iPhone 7, which is largely similar to the iPhone 6, although it boasts improved camera function, better sound, greater water and dust resistance and a longer battery life. The phone starts at $899 Cdn and $649 US, with preorders beginning Friday.

With the U.S. dollar worth about $1.29 Cdn, that $649 south of the border translates into about $839 here.

Nasr said that iPhone 7 prices may have been set when the loonie was worth less than it is today.

Apple reserves the right to adjust pricing when it launches the iPhone 7S, likely in mid-2017. And customers in Canada can receive a rebate of up to $325 on their legacy smartphones if they exchange the handset for an iPhone 7 or 7 Plus at an Apple retail outlet.

Some analysts said buyers should hold off on a new iPhone until 2017 when Apple will likely unveil a more radically re-engineered, possibly all glass iPhone 8 to mark the tenth anniversary of the popular consumer device.

APPLE BETTING ON WIRELESS WORLD

Apple wants to push users further into a wireless world. Its tactics: eliminate the headphone jack and market "AirPods" — wireless earbuds that it claims are better than Bluetooth.

AirPod angst: Analysts say Apple used a smooth-surfaced design that doesn't conform to the shape of the ear, and note that having AirPods fall out while running or biking "is less forgivable at the $159 cost level."

New direction: Analysts say Apple wants to promote its own brand of wireless listening gear since the market for such accessories is growing at a time when iPhones sales are slowing.

RACISM COMPLAINTS

Airbnb says changes coming

Airbnb on Thursday apologized for its slow response to accusations of racism and outlined new policies to combat the problem, including reducing the prominence of photos in the booking process.

The company also plans to automatically block future reservations for dates where a host has told someone that a property was unavailable.

Numerous anecdotes on social media with the hashtag #AirbnbWhileBlack recounted incidents in which African-American guests were told listings were unavailable for the dates they wanted, only to see those same listings re-advertised later for the same dates.

"We have been slow to address these problems, and for this I am sorry," said Airbnb co-founder and CEO Brian Chesky in a message published on the vacation rental website's blog.

Airbnb did not bow to critics' requests that they remove profile photos entirely so that hosts can't reject guests based on appearance, saying photos are an important security feature so hosts can recognize guests when they check in.

Advocate wins appeal

You don't need to be obese to stand up for the rights of obese people, the Federal Court of Appeal has ruled. The appeal court ordered the Canadian Transportation Agency to take another look at a passenger rights advocate's complaint over Delta Air Lines' policy of bumping obese travellers or making them buy two seats.

The agency had dismissed Gabor Lukacs' complaint because it found he didn't have standing since he was not obese and wasn't directly affected by the practice. The complaint stemmed from a 2014 email from a Delta customer care agent to a passenger who felt he was "cramped" on a flight by a large passenger. In apologizing to the man, Delta said it sometimes asks large passengers to move, "purchase additional seats," or take another flight.

At the time he filed the appeal, Lukacs argued that dismissing his complaint simply because the issue didn't affect him personally was akin to disregarding someone's concerns over contaminated food just because they weren't made sick by it.

BROADCASTING

Ban 'discriminatory' basic TV: Regulator

The national broadcast regulator should ban TV providers from removing bundling discounts from customers who opt for mandated, cut-rate, basic TV service, consumer groups told hearings Thursday.

The call came as both the Public Interest Advocacy Centre and the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission revealed they had been "threatened" by at least two service providers over information posted online that was designed to aid consumers in finding better TV services.

Removing bundling discounts amounts to discrimination and runs contrary to the intent of new rules designed to provide consumers with greater choice and flexibility in buying TV services, said PIAC executive director John Lawford.

"We believe practices such as the removing of the availability of bundling discounts and of certain services, including video-on-demand and free previews, subject certain basic service subscribers to an undue disadvantage, which is not justified," Lawford told the CRTC.

"These practices deter customers from switching or subscribing to the skinny basic."

LET'S GO CATCH AN ASTEROID

NASA's Origins, Spectral Interpretation, Resource Identification, Security-Regolith Explorer (OSIRIS-REX) blasted off yesterday, hurtling to the asteroid Bennu. If it succeeds in its mission to bring home a piece, this will be the first asteroid sample ever collected, and the largest souvenir taken home from space since the days of the moon missions.

The asteroid Bennu orbits the sun, passing between Earth and Mars, every 1.2 years.

OSIRIS is going to execute a "sling-shot" orbit around the Earth on its path to Bennu, harnessing the gravity of our planet to propel it toward the asteroid.

The three-metre articulated arm on OSIRIS, not unlike the hose on a vacuum cleaner, will very gently and slowly suck up some asteroid dust to bring back to Earth in 2023.

When it arrives at the asteroid in 2018, OSIRIS will use high-tech cameras and spectrometers to make a detailed, 3D map of Bennu's surface. Once it knows every inch, it will select a loose, dusty spot from which to take a 50g sample — four tablespoons or so.

At 492 metres across, Bennu will be the smallest object a NASA spacecraft has ever orbited around.

WHY STUDY BENNU?

Asteroids, NASA says, are "leftover debris from the solar system formation process." Scientists think Bennu has the same carbon-based molecules needed for life to emerge on Earth. One hypothesis says asteroids hitting our planet over the millennia brought us organic compounds and the water that eventually filled the oceans. Bennu is also one of the objects NASA fears could wreak havoc if it impacts the Earth. Odds of it hitting us in the next two centuries: 1 in 2700. Osiris's aim is to get to know the (potential) enemy.

Should I be freaked out by double yolks?

I got six double-yolked eggs in one carton. Why would this happen? Are they safe? It seemed like an overdose of hormones or something to me, so I threw them out just in case. — Deena, Toronto

I put your question to Frank Robinson, a professor of poultry physiology at the University of Alberta who calls himself a "chicken gynecologist." He said you have nothing to worry about,and what you found wasn't even unusual.

"I've had this question a couple of times," he said. "You get double-yolked eggs in two situations. One is when hens are really young, and two is when they're grossly overweight. The chickens that lay the eggs you buy never really get overweight."

Your eggs, Deena, were likely laid by what Robinson called "overexcited teenage chickens" with hyper-stimulated ovaries; not due to added hormones, but because that's natural at their age.

If a farmer's flock is all young chickens, nearly all the large and extra large eggs they produce will be double-yolked. Eggs are sorted by weight. Because of the way they're processed and shipped, it's common for a dozen to all be from the same farm. Therefore it's not uncommon for all or most eggs in one carton to be doubles, Robinson explained.

Robinson said it drives him nuts when eggs are marketed as "raised without added hormones": chickens have been raised without hormones, by law, since the 1960s.

I think the lesson here is about staying skeptical (not contrarian or obtuse, just skeptical), about the "facts" we take for granted — like the idea that chickens are raised with artificial hormones, an issue that has drawn a lot of public concern.

Hormones are used in agriculture in Canada, but not in poultry or pork production. If we decide, as a community, that's not something we want to do, we have to make that decision based on sound science, not panic.

The Wild Life, opening this weekend, is the latest animated film to tell a story from the point of view of animals. CONTRIBUTED

Talking animals rule the theatre

ANALYSIS

Studios try to make bank on humanizing our furry pals

Richard Crouse
For Metro Canada

Broad vocabulary, grammar and syntax are the domain of humans, but science tells us millions of species communicate by using body language and intuitive calls. Chimps can be taught to sign simple phrases and elephants have individual sounds to signify danger and emotions, but complex storytelling is left to us humans.

Unless you're at the movies. This year, theatres have been overrun by hordes of anthropomorphic animals. From Zootopia and Nine Lives to The Secret Lives of Pets and The Jungle Book, animals have been talking up a storm.

This weekend The Wild Life becomes the latest animated film to tell a story from the point of view of wildlife. A riff on Daniel Defoe's classic tale of survival, Robinson Crusoe, the film's narrator is a bright red parrot named Mak (David Howard).

In this version, Crusoe crash lands on an island where animals rule and must work with the chatty Mak, a tapir named Rosie and Kiki the kingfisher to save their home from an invasion by some savage felines.

Disney has the grandest tradition of talking animals — Mickey Mouse to The Little Mermaid's Sebastian the Crab and Jiminy Cricket to name just a few — but they are not the only ones putting words into our pet's mouths.

Flushed Away comes from Aardman, the animation company behind Wallace and Gromit.

The story of an upper class pet mouse flushed down the loo by a bullying rat features great animation, an all-star British voice cast and something that all kids love — toilet humour. It swirls along at quite a clip, effortlessly mixing literate verbal and visual jokes — we glimpse a cockroach reading Kafka's Metamorphosis — with potty humour that'll appeal to the kids.

G-Force's talking crime fighting guinea pigs come courtesy of über-producer Jerry Bruckheimer. The voice cast includes not one, but two Oscar winners, which may be an indication that the recession has finally taken root in Hollywood.

When the best gig Penelope Cruz can get involves saying lines like "Oh, I have to save his fur again?" you know times are tight for A-listers.

Pixar's Ratatouille is an unusual cross between America's Next Top Chef and Willard. Remy (voiced by Patton Oswalt) is a sophisticated rodent with a highly developed sense of smell and a wicked sense of humour.

While his rat brothers and sisters are happy to simply survive by scavenging through the garbage, Remy aspires to culinary greatness. Ratatouille does something no other film has been able to — not that a lot of have tried — it makes rats cute, lovable even.

On the live action front, Zookeeper, or as any Kevin James movie could be called, "Fat Guy Falling Down… A Lot," plays like Dr. Doolittle if Dr. Doolittle was a romantic comedy for kids. Luckily the animals come to the rescue. Luckily the monkey from The Hangover 2 has some of the film's best lines. Adam Sandler provides the monkey voice, but also listen for the beastly vocal work of Cher, Nick Nolte, Don Rickles and Sylvester Stallone.

Penn a leader in peace, justice: Haggis

When a catastrophic earthquake struck Haiti in 2010, Canadian filmmaker Paul Haggis wanted to help but was stuck for days in a Fort Lauderdale, Fla., airport waiting for flights to resume to the region.

Enter actor-activist Sean Penn, who picked up Haggis in his cargo plane and flew him as well as a medical team and supplies to help with the relief efforts.

When it comes to humanitarian work and fighting for what he believes in, Penn delivers results, says Haggis, who is honouring the two-time Oscar winner with an award at his Artists for Peace and Justice benefit in support of Haiti in Toronto on Sunday.

TIFF Award

"I've always truly admired him," says Haggis, a London, Ont.-born writer-director who has also won two Oscars, for his 2006 film Crash.

"He speaks his mind and he walks the walk and there are so few people in this world ... who do that."

Penn will receive a peace and justice award at Haggis's eighth annual benefit, the Bovet 1822 Artists for Peace and Justice 2016 Festival Fair. He's being recognized for his humanitarian work in Haiti and hurricane-ravaged New Orleans, as well as his activism.

Penn is also known for his landmark interviews, including last October's chat with fugitive Mexican drug lord Joaquin (El Chapo) Guzman for Rolling Stone magazine. He was heavily criticized for the secret meeting, which he said was intended to shed new light on the U.S. government's drug policy.

"I kind of loved him for it," says Haggis. "I think our drug laws are so draconian, I think we have created much of this problem and we love to point the finger and vilify others ... This has created as much of this problem as the drug lords have.

5 OUT-OF-THE-BOX TIFF FILMS

Festival films eschew the movie clichés we've come to expect. The majority of TIFF films are made by directors and screenwriters who want to tell different types of stories, or familiar ones told in unique ways.

PETER HOWELL/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

1 Toni Erdmann

At Cannes in May, journalists at a screening of Maren Ade's Toni Erdmann interrupted their oh-so-serious concentration and applauded as actress Sandra Huller suddenly started singing Whitney Houston's The Greatest Love of All. But the father/daughter hijinks of Toni Erdmann won most of us over, making the film the hit of Cannes 2016 — and it's likely to be just as popular with audiences in the coming days at TIFF, where it will have its Canadian premiere.

2 La La Land

Damien Chazelle's La La Land happily and colourfully salutes vintage musicals like The Umbrellas of Cherbourg, with Ryan Gosling and Emma Stone making for a most winsome song-and-dance pairing. Yet the film also addresses modern angst about ambition, questioning the trade-off of getting what we want while risking what we have.

3 Paterson

Jim Jarmusch's Paterson finds poetry in the quotidian habits of a New Jersey bus driver, played by Adam Driver, who delights in the simple pleasures of a devoted wife (Golshifteh Farahani) and a daily post-work beer, which move him to scribble deceptively blank verse into his notebook.

4 Two Lovers and a Bear

Two Lovers and a Bear, by Montreal's Kim Nguyen, is loaded with surprises that make the sitcom title seem almost like a misnomer. That bear, for example, speaks with the voice of actor Gordon Pinsent. And the characters played by Tatiana Maslany and Dane DeHaan don't follow footprints left by others in the Arctic snow.

5 Arrival

I haven't yet seen Arrival, the sci-fi film by Denis Villeneuve, which stars Amy Adams as a linguistic expert summoned to communicate with visiting extraterrestrials. But I am delighted to see from reviews out of Venice and Telluride that Villeneuve appears to have eschewed many sci-fi tropes while maintaining many of the tale's deep and intangible mysteries.

BIRTH OF A NATION

Focus still on Parker ahead of screening

The Birth of a Nation is slated to screen at the Toronto International Film Festival on Friday, but the buzz surrounding the slave rebellion drama has moved away from the screen in recent weeks as controversy swirls around co-writer, director and star Nate Parker.

A 17-year-old rape allegation against Parker and his co-writer Jean Celestin while they were students at Penn State University has loomed in the headlines and threatened to overshadow the film.

Parker was acquitted in the case. Celestin was initially found guilty of sexual assault in the same case, but the conviction was later overturned when the accuser declined to testify for a retrial. The accuser killed herself in 2012.

Parker's co-star Gabrielle Union, who portrays a rape victim in the film, recently wrote an opinion piece for the Los Angeles Times where she spoke of being "in a state of stomach-churning confusion" since learning about the allegations. Union says she was raped at gunpoint 24 years ago and took the role because she "related to the experience."

Union also wrote that while she doesn't know what happened in Parker's case, she saw the film as "an opportunity to inform and educate so that these situations cease to occur."

"Obviously, it's very unfortunate for Nate to have something that happened to him 17 years ago and something that he was found not guilty of be really tearing this work apart," said co-star Mark Boone Junior in a phone interview.

TIFF still plans to screen the film, and a press conference with the talent is scheduled.

The Birth of a Nation has appeared poised for award season accolades well before its arrival in Toronto.

Parker's directorial debut won key prizes at Sundance Film Festival in January and was sold to Fox Searchlight for a record $17.5 million.

Mark Boone Junior on The Birth of a Nation

Parker portrays Nat Turner, a literate slave and preacher who leads a slave revolt against white plantation owners in 1831 Virginia.

"This story has never really been told," said Boone, who portrays Rev. Walthall in the film. "We all know that Abraham Lincoln came out against (slavery) and there was a war called the Civil War where many, many people were killed, families fighting each other over this issue of slavery.

"But there was a significant part of the population — the slaves themselves — who were also rejecting the idea of being slaves. I don't think that side of it has actually been told — definitely not in this way."

Son of Spock boldly goes into the past

INTERVIEW

Adam Nimoy delves into life with the man behind the ears

Steve Gow
For Metro Canada

The son of Star Trek legend Leonard Nimoy remembers the first time he realized just how famous his father actually was.

Adam Nimoy was much younger then, and even though he also loved a new TV show called Star Trek, the son of Spock wasn't prepared for the barrage of fans that accosted the pair during a family visit to a West Los Angeles carnival.

"We were mobbed and had to leave immediately, it was really a weird scene," said Nimoy while promoting his film For The Love of Spock. "That was when I realized that things had changed forever — that we were no longer experiencing the same lives we'd been leading."

> This idea of being an outsider seems to be the number one reason why Spock has resonated with so many people.
> Adam Nimoy

For the actor's son, it also meant a lifelong struggle with his complex relationship to the man behind the pointy-eared Vulcan who has been part of the zeitgeist for 50 years.

Originally envisaged as a tribute to the character of Spock, the film quickly became an exploration of the father-son relationship after Leonard Nimoy's death last year.

"He had great humility — he wanted it to be focused primarily about Spock, not on the brilliant career of Leonard Nimoy," recalled the 60-year-old filmmaker. "(But) after he died, it became clear that so many people were affected by my dad's career and who he was as a human being that we needed to include his life and legacy as well."

As such, Nimoy interviewed such series' luminaries as William Shatner and Trek revivalist J.J. Abrams to discuss their memories even as he explores his own discordant relationship with his famous father.

Still, as contentious as the Nimoy's youthful relationship was, Adam was always an admirer of Mr. Spock.

Ironically, it was this experience of fighting with fans for the affections of his own father that perhaps made him relate most to the character.

"This idea of being an outsider seems to be the number one reason why Spock has resonated with so many people," said Nimoy.

"There are a lot of great documentary filmmakers out there who could've done a great job on Mr. Spock and Leonard Nimoy but no one could've told my perspective, my particular unique story."

QUOTED

The misunderstood Leonard Nimoy

"People confused him with Mr. Spock and asked him what it was like to live on Vulcan," explained Nimoy of his dad naming his autobiography I Am Not Spock. "Up until the very last years of his life, he was trying to explain how he mistitled that book."

The power of Spock

"Spock is great to look at, number one. He's just so compelling and so interesting," said Nimoy of the character's resonance. "Spock was the guy who stood up and said it's cool to be an outsider."

Spock, before and after

"After my dad passed away there was this huge outpouring of emotion from everywhere," said Nimoy of the documentary's shift in focus to pay homage to the actor behind Spock. STEVE GOW/METRO

Charming, quaint, Gibsons also a magnet for art lovers

Good day, Sunshine

Gibsons is located on the southern end of B.C.'s Sunshine Coast. Inset: while millennials will probably not get the reference, Molly's Reach is a popular photo opp for tourists who remember the CBC show Beachcombers, which ran from 1972 to 1990. ALL PHOTOS ISTOCK

Howe Sound is glass-still on the voyage from Gibsons Landing to Keats Island, save for the odd motorboat wake jostling the kayak.

The peace is also broken momentarily as a seal bursts out of the water, letting out a hearty snort before it dives back beneath the surface.

Gibsons is a quaint and colourful town at the southern end of British Columbia's Sunshine Coast, a 180-kilometre stretch of picturesque oceanside communities and jagged coastline along the Strait of Georgia.

Many visitors to Gibsons get a kick out of the numerous nods to the long-running Canadian sitcom The Beachcombers, which was filmed in the town and ran from 1972 to 1990.

The Persephone, the tug piloted in the show by log salvager Nick Adonidas (played by Bruno Gerussi), sits on a prominent street corner in the centre of town, right by Molly's Reach, the cafe where much of the action took place.

"Someone gets their picture taken every day in front of Molly's Reach," says bed-and-breakfast owner Celia Robben, who heads up Sunshine Coast Tourism.

"To a specific demographic, it's definitely a draw... If you're under 30, you don't have a clue."

Most visitors arrive at the Sunshine Coast via ferry from Vancouver's Horseshoe Bay. The northern part of the Sunshine Coast can also be accessed by ferry from Comox, on Vancouver Island.

Robben estimates up to half a million visitors come to the region every year, though the summer is by far the busiest time. The permanent population is only about a tenth of that.

"We're very much a cottage country for Vancouver and the Lower Mainland," she says.

Robben and her husband moved to Gibsons about a decade ago from Houston to open their B&B, Arcturus Retreats. She recalls making the decision while on a ski vacation in Whistler.

"As we were driving up the Sea-to-Sky (Highway), we were looking over at the Sunshine Coast, seeing our future home at a distance," she says. That was in February.

"By July, we were househunting."

Outdoor activities are a big draw, says Robben. In a climate where temperatures rarely dip below 0 C, kayaking, mountain biking and hiking can be done year-round.

The Sunshine Coast is also a magnet for art lovers, Robben says, with painters, potters, jewelry makers and glass blowers setting up shop in the region.

A purple banner outside an artists' studio signifies that the public is welcome to pop in. An "art crawl" is set for Oct. 21-23 along the Sunshine Coast Highway. Last year's event included 125 venues.

Cleveland rocks

At the Blue Arrow Records in the Waterloo Arts District in Cleveland, I was stepping on music history, going through an array of influential music. EMANUELA CAMPANELLA/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

OHIO

Former Rust Belt city has bounced back

Emanuela Campanella
For Torstar News Service

Walking down the streets of the Waterloo Arts District, I stumbled upon an indie record shop called Blue Arrow Records. I felt like I was walking on music history, with floors covered in old record posters. Dracula's greatest hits were underneath my right foot and nearby was Elvis Presley looking oh so handsome.

GROWING
Cleveland's population has increased by 79 per cent since 2000, according to Downtown Cleveland Alliance

At that moment, I realized, Cleveland is a special place.

"What's there to do in Cleveland?" my family had asked me.

Well, it's a little jewel that Canadians tend to bypass for cities like New York and Chicago.

One corner of the Waterloo Arts District looked like a revitalized junk yard, sprinkled with what looks like Christmas lights and sculptures. This is Cleveland now — revitalized through arts.

Like Pittsburgh or Detroit, Cleveland was part of the Rust Belt. It lost a lot of people when the manufacturing industry collapsed.

Thanks to tax credits, low property cost and a huge investment into the arts, Cleveland's population has now bounced back.

The city is home to 78th Street Studios, 170,000 square feet of art galleries, artist studios, performance spaces and music recording studios. Every third Friday of the month, the "eclectic art maze," originally home to the Baker Electric Motor Vehicle Co., opens for a night of visual exhibits.

You will see metal track doors and old freight elevators where the cars were once taken down to the loading docks for distribution. Now the place is roaming with creative types who've put their love and sweat into their paintings, photographs and sculptures.

Besides the burgeoning arts movement, Cleveland has a long history with music. At the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame, you literally go through the majestic evolution of music.

There's Michael Jackson's sparkly glove, Janis Joplin's psychedelic Porsche and scribbled lyrics from the Beatles.

With the world's largest collection of rock artifacts, the Hall of Fame reminds you that music lives strong, no matter what political unrest or turmoil is happening across the globe.

On a smaller scale, the Happy Dog at Euclid Tavern is an ultra retro bar that has become an institution and a true Cleveland treasure for live music. I sank my teeth into a gourmet hot dog topped with Froot Loops during the kitsch "Polka Happy Hour." Only here will you get an intimate show by Cleveland Orchestra musicians.

If you're feeling fancy, go to Severance Hall to catch the Cleveland Orchestra. There's something chilling about hearing 100 members of the orchestra perform together for a full-on classical experience.

Tenacity meets style in a town where you can browse modern art inside a turn-of-the-century car factory, hear the orchestra perform live inside the local hot dog joint and chow down on pierogis at the legendary Beachland Ballroom concert venue.

While admiring the intricate red and yellow hues from hand blown glass at the Glass Bubble Project in the Ohio City neighbourhood, I was told by owner and artist Mike Kaplan that once you catch the art "bug," in Cleveland, it's hard to leave.

Stumbling on your career path

CAREER PLANNING

Not everyone knows what they wanted to do from the start

Jason Menard

Best way to begin planning is to work with someone knowledgable in career development. ISTOCK

When you're young, looking toward the future and exploring career options, it can often be overwhelming. And though it can feel like everyone else has it figured out, the truth of the matter is that career planning is an individual process.

"Sometimes it can appear to be a very mysterious process. We all know someone who has known what they wanted to do since Grade Four," explained Shirin Khamisa, a career counsellor and founder of Careers by Design Coaching. "The rest of us are stumbling along."

And the idea that you can predict what the future's job needs are is folly.

"Nobody can really accurately predict the job market," she said. "The world is changing faster than it was in the '80s and '90s. One thing that's helpful when looking at opportunities is to consider fit and strengths.

"The best way to start the process is to ensure you're working with someone knowledgeable in career development."

Mark Franklin, practice leader and president of CareerCycles, and co-founder of OneLifeTools, said it's important to remember that there's no one key determinant for career planning, but rather it's a combination of multiple factors.

"It's really crucial not to put too much pressure on 'What do you want to be when you grow up?'" he said. "Focus on examining promising and inspiring future possibilities, and have them guide your course selection and post-secondary education. That way you can keep several doors open."

Franklin said he suggests looking at six key elements – the answers to which can help guide your decisions."

"An effective model is one that's 'wholistic' and takes into consideration six key elements: other people's perspectives [including parents]; desires – what do you want to do and what kind of lifestyle you want to lead; strengths and skills; personality; interests and natural inclinations; and assets — what do you bring with you," he said. "Making decisions that take into consideration all those elements can lead to promising possibilities."

Redeploy your skills, strengths in a new job

Some people know when a career change is coming. For others, it can be forced upon them. Regardless of how it happens, it's important to take time to reflect upon next steps.

"I'd like to put in a plug for reflection upon experience," explained Mark Franklin, practice leader and president of CareerCycles, and co-founder of OneLifeTools. "Sometimes change happens because you chose it; sometimes it chooses you.

"How can you redeploy your skills and strengths? What are the skills you like to use and what do you want to do?"

Knowing the state of the job market is imperative for those in the midst of a mid-career change. ISTOCK

Alan Kearns, career coach and founder of CareerJoy, said that those in the midst of a mid-career change need to evaluate not only their personal state, but also the state of the job market in their area.

"Two things: what makes you tick, and in a competitive market, what are your transferrable skills and assets," he said. "In the geographic area what is aligned with your experience and are realistically an option."

Kearns also added that people should discuss these issues with their family. Perhaps relocation could be on the table in search of better job opportunities. "Talk to your family about different options," he said.

Many people focus on the financial right away when dealing with job change, but for Shirin Khamisa, a career counsellor and founder of Careers by Design Coaching, there's also important mental and emotional considerations of which people must be aware.

"It's a big moment for people and it's a kind of change that can be difficult. If we've been doing work for a long time, it becomes part of our identity," she said, adding that can be put into question after a job loss. "They're not sure where they stand anymore. There's a lot of stress and anxiety."

"Ensure you have good coping skills and learning strategies."

Franklin also recommended that people turn to the professionals for help. For some reason, those seeking career advice tend to look to less professional sources of support, but a career counsellor can make all the difference.

The Jays' hunt for October

The Blue Jays are hoping a return to Rogers Centre will help them bounce back after a three-game sweep in New York knocked Toronto out of first place in the American League East. The division race is the tightest in Major League Baseball with Toronto, Baltimore and New York all within striking distance of first-place Boston. Here's a look at five things to watch as the Blue Jays make their playoff push.

1 Big guns

The Blue Jays have lined up their best starters for a key three-game series with the Boston Red Sox this weekend. Marco Estrada (8-7, 3.56 ERA) gets the nod in Friday night's opener. Left-hander J.A. Happ (17-4, 3.34) will start Saturday and Aaron Sanchez (13-2, 2.92) is on tap Sunday. Toronto — holder of the first AL wild card-spot — enters the series in second place in the East, one game behind the Red Sox.

2 Missed opportunities

Toronto had trouble cashing in runners earlier this week in New York. Improvement will be needed this weekend against Boston, a team with arguably the best offence in the major leagues. The Blue Jays cashed in only six of 28 runners in scoring position during the three-game series in the Bronx.

3 September schedule

With the exception of a seven-game West Coast road trip, Toronto will only play East division opponents the rest of the way. The Jays will end the regular season with a three-game set at Fenway Park against the Red Sox. Boston will play all 23 of its remaining games against East opponents while Baltimore will play 17 of its 23 games against division rivals.

4 Numbers game

It took 93 wins for the Blue Jays to win the East last year and a number close to that will likely be needed to claim the division title this season. To get to 93 victories, the Blue Jays (77-62) would need to close out the campaign on a 16-7 run. However, it's possible that 90 wins could be enough since there are so many intradivision matchups on the schedule.

5 Spoiled September

The 2015 edition of the Blue Jays had a 51-51 record in late July before going 42-18 en route to their first division title since 1993. Former ace David Price left Toronto for Boston as a free agent, stinging many Toronto fans. He'll likely be on the mound in that season-ending series between the Red Sox and Jays.

Canadian women top Britain in wheelchair hoops opener

Canada's women's wheelchair basketball team opened the Rio Paralympics with a 43-36 victory over Britain on Thursday.

Janet McLachlan of North Vancouver, B.C., scored 21 points and grabbed 22 rebounds to lead a Canadian team looking to bounce back from a sixth-place finish four years ago in London.

Lochte forced to forfeit Olympic prize money

Ryan Lochte will forfeit $100,000 and a chance to swim at next year's world championships as part of the penalty for his drunken encounter at a gas station in Brazil during last month's Olympics.

Lochte will also get no monthly funding from either the U.S. Olympic Committee or USA Swimming, and must perform 20 hours of community service.

Receiver Jones ready to take flight for Falcons

The Falcons have wide receiver Julio Jones back with full clearance for practice, confirming the team's biggest star will be ready for Sunday's opening game against Tampa Bay.

Jones' status for the opener was never really in doubt, even when he was held out of last week's final pre-season game with an ankle injury and was limited in Wednesday's practice. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RECIPE Garlic Apple Grilled Cheese

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

If you're looking for a way to switch up your humble grilled cheese, allow us to introduce you to our garlic apple version. You may never just grill a few slices of cheese between bread again.

Ready in 15 minutes
Prep time: 5 minutes
Cook time: 10 minutes
Serves 4

Ingredients
- 1 Tbsp butter
- 1 clove garlic, grated
- 1 Gala apple, peeled and thinly sliced
- 4 pieces of multi-grain bread
- 1/2 cup crumbled, aged cheddar

Directions

1. In a medium frying pan, melt butter over medium heat. Add garlic and sauté till garlic is translucent, about 2 minutes.

2. Toss in apples and sauté until soft, about 2 to 3 minutes. Remove apples and place on a clean plate.

3. In the same pan, place a slice of bread and then cover the top with the shaved cheddar. Lay slice of apple atop cheese and then cap with the other slice of bread. Cook until the underside becomes a gold brown then flip. Remove from the pan and serve when the cheese melts thoroughly and the top is also a golden brown. Repeat with other two slices of bread.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
Guess what? The next 12 months are fabulous for close friendships and relationships. It's the best time to marry in over a decade! Yee-haw!

Taurus April 21 - May 21
Start to look for fabulous opportunities to improve your job or get a better job, because they exist for you in the next 12 months. (Would I kid you?)

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Grab every chance to take a vacation and enjoy the arts, sports, fun times and flirtations in the next 12 months. Plan on lots of vacations in the next year!

Cancer June 22 - July 23
For the next 12 months, you have fabulous opportunities in real estate! If you cannot speculate in real estate, you can at least improve your own home

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Your everyday experiences, encounters and relationships will be super positive in the next year. This blesses all your dealings with relatives, siblings and neighbors.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Finally, in the year ahead, you will have a chance to make more money. Not only will you boost your income, many of you will make major purchases as well.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Today Lucky Jupiter moves into your sign for the first time since 2005. This brings you great good fortune! Expect sunny days ahead.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
For the next year, you will be quietly confident, because your focus will be on your inner development. Use this time to plan what you want your future to be all about.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Do not feel worried if you are discouraged today. It's just one of those things. But the truth is, you can see what really is happening. Therefore, do nothing. Be safe.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Although you want to travel to expand your world through an increase in learning and knowledge, something is holding you back. The bottom line is that it is self-doubt: Don't listen to this voice.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Do not be discouraged if someone older is critical of you. Basically, some kind of misunderstanding is the cause. Do not take it personally.

Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
This is a poor day to make important decisions or to accept instructions or direction from anyone in a position of authority. Everything is confusing!
